HIGH COURT (MELAKA) — CIVIL SUIT NO 22-261 OF 1999
AHMAD MAAROP JC
20 AUGUST 2001

Contract — Damages — Sale and purchase of property — Assessment of damages — Substantial part of land on slope — Reduction in value of land due to slope

B

Quantum — Contract — Term — Implied terms — When term to be implied in contract — Sale and purchase of vacant land for construction of bungalow — Substantial part of land on slope — Agreement silent on terrain of land — Whether land was in condition fit, suitable and ready for construction of bungalow without carrying out remedial works to the land — Whether court to imply a term that land must be flat land

C

By an agreement dated 29 April 1995 ('the SPA'), the defendant as a developer sold to the plaintiffs a bungalow plot identified as HS (D) No 26284, PT No 426, Mukim Bukit Katil, District of Melaka Tengah, Melaka ('the land') measuring 14,681.96 sq ft at a purchase price of RM205,547.44 calculated at RM14 per sq ft. The plaintiffs had fully paid the purchase price. When vacant possession of the land was delivered to the plaintiffs, they realized that out of the total 14,681.96 sq ft of land, only 9,073 sq ft was on flat land. The remainder 5,606 sq ft was on sloped land. The plaintiffs contended that the existence of the slope constituted a breach of the contract on the part of the defendant as the plaintiffs had been deprived of what was promised to them under the SPA and/or had suffered substantial loss and damage arising therefrom. The plaintiffs filed a writ of summons against the defendant and prayed for, inter alia, specific performance of the SPA or damages in addition or in lieu of specific performance. The defendant's witness (SD3) admitted that unless the plaintiffs reclaimed the slope, they could never build on the area comprised in the slope. At the trial, the defendant tried to introduce the evidence that the land was sold to the plaintiffs at a cheaper price due to the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister and that the price of RM14 per sq ft was a discounted price and that the land was sold at that price due to the slope. There was no express provision in the SPA regarding the existence or otherwise of the slope. In addition, the SPA did not state that the land would be in a condition ready, fit and suitable for the construction of a bungalow, without any need to undertake any remedial works on any part of the land. The SPA did however state that the plaintiffs were responsible for constructing retaining walls and that the defendant was responsible for carrying out earthworks on the land as may be necessary in a terrain like manner, taking into account to nature and slope of the land.

Held, allowing the plaintiffs' claim:

I

- (1) The court could not rewrite the SPA executed by the plaintiffs and the defendant but would only imply such term or terms as may be

- A necessary to render the SPA effective or complete in the manner in which the plaintiffs and the defendant were presumed to have intended. The court would be prepared to imply a term if it arose from the language of the agreement and the circumstances under which the agreement was entered into (see pp 533H–I, 536A–B).
- B (2) The parties were bound by their pleadings and in this connection, the defendant had not pleaded that the land was sold to the plaintiffs at a cheaper price because of the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister. Without the first plaintiff's sister testifying, the evidence on what she was alleged to have said was hearsay.
- C Furthermore, this allegation was never put to the first plaintiff by the defendant's counsel when the former was giving evidence. As no valid explanation had been tendered by the defendant for this failure, the defendant was accordingly prevented from raising this in evidence as a defence. Under s 136 of the Evidence Act 1950, the trial judge was empowered to permit only such evidence to be given, which in his opinion was relevant and admissible.
- D The judge did not have to hear the evidence objected to and then later decide whether the evidence was relevant and admissible. Questions of admissibility of evidence were questions of law and determinable by the judge (see p 539B–F).
- E (3) The defendant did not plead in its statement of defence that the price of RM14 per sq ft was a discounted price and that the land was sold at that discounted price due to the slope. Further, this defence was never raised with or put to the first plaintiff when he gave evidence. Such a failure, in the absence of any valid explanation, was sufficient to bar the defendant from raising it in its defence (see p 540D–F).
- F (4) The existence of the slope and the reduction in the total area of the land were two different things. In order to be representative of the contracting parties' intention that the 14,681.96 sq ft could include 5,606 sq ft of sloped land, there must be an express provision to that effect. The mere mention of 'retaining wall' and 'slope' in the SPA was not sufficient to capture and convey that intention.
- G The entire 14,681.96 sq ft of land purchased by the plaintiffs must be available and ready for construction, that is, be in a condition fit, suitable and ready for construction of a bungalow or other similar dwelling without the necessity of doing any remedial works to improve the conditions of the land.
- H In order to be in that condition, the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of the land must be flat and if a substantial portion of the land (38% in the instant case) was sloped land, then it could not be said that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of the land was in the condition that was ready and available for construction (see p 541C–F).
- I (5) Considering the SPA, the purpose for which the land was purchased and other circumstances of the case, the term that the entire 14,861.96 sq ft of the land must be flat land was necessary to make the agreement effective and complete. On the balance of probability, this term must have been too clear or obvious to the plaintiffs and the defendant and accordingly, it was an implied term of the SPA that the entire area of the bungalow plot to be delivered to the plaintiffs must, at the time of delivery, be flat land so that it was in the condition fit, suitable and ready for construction to commence. By delivering to the plaintiffs the plot of land with 5,606 sq ft of sloped land, the defendant had committed a breach of the SPA (see p 544D–F).

- (6) Based on the evidence of the plaintiffs' registered valuer (SP3), the land was valued at RM140,000 or RM9.50 per sq ft due to the slope. As the defendant did not produce any valuation report or evidence to challenge the valuation made by the SP3, the evidence of SP3 was accepted. The loss in value of the land was RM4.50 per sq ft or RM66,068.82 for the entire land (based on 14,681.96 sq ft x RM4.50) (see p 545A–D).

[Bahasa Malaysia summary]

Melalui satu perjanjian bertarikh 29 April 1995 ('PJB tersebut'), defendan sebagai pemaju telah menjual kepada plaintiff-plaintif sebuah petak bungalow yang dikenali sebagai HS (D) No 26284, PT No 426, Mukim Bukit Katil, Daerah Malaka Tengah, Melaka ('tanah tersebut') yang berukuran 14,681.96 kaki persegi dengan harga belian RM205,547.44 dikira pada RM14 kaki persegi. Plaintiff-plaintif telah membuat pembayaran penuh terhadap harga belian tersebut. Semasa milikan kosong tanah tersebut diserahkan kepada plaintiff-plaintif, mereka menyedari bahawa daripada jumlah 14,681.96 kaki persegi tanah tersebut, hanya 9,073 kaki persegi merupakan tanah datar. Baki 5,606 kaki persegi merupakan tanah bercerun. Plaintiff-plaintif menegaskan bahawa kehadiran cerun-cerun tersebut membentuk satu pelanggaran kontrak di pihak defendan kerana plaintiff-plaintif tidak memperolehi apa yang dijanjikan oleh defendan di bawah PJB tersebut dan/atau telah mengalami kerugian dan kehilangan yang substantif akibat daripada itu. Plaintiff-plaintif telah memfailkan satu writ saman terhadap defendan dan memohon, antara lain, untuk pelaksanaan spesifik PJB tersebut atau ganti rugi sebagai tambahan atau sebagai ganti pelaksanaan spesifik. Saksi defendan (SD3) telah membuat pengakuan bahawa kecuali jika plaintiff-plaintif menebus guna semula cerun tersebut, mereka tidak akan dapat membina di atas tapak yang termasuk cerun tersebut. Semasa perbicaraan, defendan cuba untuk mengemukakan keterangan bahawa tanah tersebut telah dijual kepada plaintiff-plaintif pada harga yang lebih murah atas syor kakak plaintiff pertama dan bahawa harga RM14 kaki persegi merupakan satu potongan harga dan bahawa tanah tersebut telah dijual pada harga tersebut disebabkan cerun tersebut. Tiada peruntukan nyata dalam PJB tersebut berhubung kewujudan cerun tersebut atau sebaliknya. Tambahan lagi, PJB tersebut tidak menyatakan bahawa tanah tersebut

H

I

- A akan berada dalam keadaan yang tersedia, padan dan sesuai untuk kerja-kerja pembinaan sebuah bungalow, tanpa apa-apa keperluan untuk menjalankan apa-apa kerja-kerja pemulihan pada mana-mana bahagian tanah tersebut. PJB tersebut bagaimanapun ada menyatakan bahawa plaintif-plaintif bertanggungjawab untuk membina tembok-tembok penahan dan bahawa defendan bertanggungjawab untuk melaksanakan kerja-kerja tanah ke atas tanah tersebut sebagaimana yang diperlukan dalam bentuk rupa bumi sedemikian, dengan mengambilkira sifat dan cerun tanah tersebut.
- B

Diputuskan, membenarkan tuntutan plaintif:

- C (1) Mahkamah tidak boleh membuat semula PJB tersebut yang telah disempurnakan oleh plaintif-plaintif dan defendan tetapi hanya akan membayangkan terma atau terma-terma yang mungkin perlu untuk menjadikan PJB tersebut berkesan atau sempurna dalam bentuk di mana plaintif-plaintif dan defendan dianggap telah niatkan. Mahkamah akan bersedia untuk membayangkan satu terma jika ia timbul daripada bahasa perjanjian tersebut dan keadaan di mana perjanjian tersebut disempurnakan (lihat ms 533H-I, 536A-B).
- E (2) Pihak-pihak tersebut terikat oleh pliding-pliding mereka dan mengenai kaitan ini, defendan tidak memplikan bahawa tanah tersebut telah dijual kepada plaintif-plaintif pada harga yang lebih murah atas syor kakak plaintif pertama. Tanpa keterangan kakak plaintif pertama, keterangan atas apa yang beliau didakwa telah katakan hanya dengar cakap. Tambahan pula, dakwaan ini tidak diutarakan kepada plaintif pertama oleh peguam defendan semasa plaintif pertama memberikan keterangan. Memandangkan tiada penjelasan sah mengenai kegagalan ini telah diberi oleh defendan, defendan sewajarnya dihalang daripada menimbulkan perkara ini dalam keterangan sebagai satu pembelaan. Di bawah s 136 Akta Keterangan 1950, hakim perbicaraan telah diberi kuasa untuk membenarkan hanya keterangan yang diberikan, di mana pada pendapat beliau adalah relevan dan boleh diterima. Hakim tersebut tidak perlu mendengar keterangan yang dibantah dan kemudian baru memutuskan sama ada keterangan tersebut adalah relevan dan boleh diterima. Persoalan-persoalan tentang keterangan boleh terima merupakan persoalan-persoalan undang-undang dan perlu ditentukan oleh hakim (lihat ms 539B-F).
- F
- G
- H (3) Defendan tidak membuat pli dalam pernyataan pembelaannya bahawa harga RM14 kaki persegi adalah satu potongan harga dan bahawa tanah tersebut telah dijual pada potongan harga tersebut disebabkan cerun tersebut. Tambahan pula, pembelaan ini tidak ditimbulkan dengan atau kepada plaintif pertama semasa beliau memberikan keterangan. Kegagalan sedemikian, tanpa apa-apa penjelasan yang sah, adalah mencukupi untuk menghalang defendan daripada menimbulkannya dalam pembelaannya (lihat ms 540D-F).
- I

- (4) Kewujudan cerun tersebut dan pengurangan keseluruhan kawasan tanah tersebut adalah dua perkara yang berbeza. Bagi tujuan mewakili niat pihak-pihak yang memasuki kontrak bahawa 14,681.96 kaki persegi tersebut termasuklah 5,606 kaki persegi tanah bercerun tersebut, mestilah terdapat satu peruntukan yang nyata. Sekadar menyebut 'tembok penahan' dan 'cerun' di dalam PJB tersebut tidak mencukupi untuk menguasai dan menyampaikan niat tersebut. Keseluruhan 14,681.96 kaki persegi tanah yang dibeli oleh plaintiff-plaintiff mestilah sedia ada dan bersedia untuk kerja-kerja pembinaan, iaitu, berada dalam keadaan yang layak dan sesuai dan bersedia untuk pembinaan sebuah bungalow atau apa-apa kediaman yang serupa tanpa keperluan untuk membuat apa-apa kerja-kerja pemulihan untuk memperbaiki keadaan tanah tersebut. Bagi tujuan berada dalam keadaan tersebut, keseluruhan 14,681.96 kaki persegi tanah tersebut mestilah datar dan jika sebahagian besar daripada tanah tersebut (38% dalam kes ini) adalah tanah bercerun, maka ia tidak boleh dikatakan bahawa keseluruhan 14,681.96 kaki persegi tanah berada dalam keadaan yang bersedia dan sedia untuk kerja-kerja pembinaan (lihat ms 541C–F).
- (5) Dengan mengambilkira PJB tersebut, tujuan tanah tersebut dibeli dan lain-lain keadaan kes ini, terma bahawa keseluruhan 14,861.96 kaki persegi tanah mestilah tanah datar adalah perlu untuk membuat perjanjian tersebut berkesan dan sempurna. Atas imbalan kebarangkalian, terma ini semestinya amat jelas atau nyata kepada plaintiff-plaintiff dan defendan dan sewajarnya, ia adalah terma tersirat PJB tersebut bahawa keseluruhan kawasan petak bungalow yang diserahkan kepada plaintiff-plaintiff mestilah, pada masa penyerahan, merupakan tanah datar agar ia berada dalam keadaan yang padan, sesuai dan sedia untuk pembinaan dimulakan. Dengan penyerahan kepada plaintiff-plaintiff petak tanah tersebut yang termasuk 5,606 kaki persegi tanah bercerun, defendan telah melakukan pelanggaran PJB tersebut (lihat ms 544D–F).
- (6) Berdasarkan keterangan penilai berdaftar plaintiff-plaintiff (SP3), tanah tersebut dinilai pada harga RM140,000 atau RM9.50 kaki persegi disebabkan oleh cerun tersebut. Memandangkan defendan tidak mengemukakan apa-apa laporan penilaian atau keterangan untuk mencabar penilaian yang dibuat oleh SP3, keterangan SP3 telah diterima. Kerugian dalam nilai tanah tersebut adalah sebanyak RM4.50 kaki persegi atau RM66,068.83 untuk keseluruhan tanah (berdasarkan 14,681.96 kaki persegi x RM4.50) (lihat ms 545A–D).]

Evidence Act 1950 ss 5, 92, 136

- E Benjamin Yean (Benjamin Yean & Co) for the plaintiff.
Peter Gan (Hock & Associates) for the defendant.

Ahmad Maarop JC:. On 4 August 1999, the plaintiffs filed a writ of summons against the defendant. According to the statement of claim filed by the plaintiffs, their case against the defendant is as follows:

- F By an agreement in writing dated 29 April 1995, the defendant, as a developer, sold to the plaintiffs a bungalow plot identified as HS(D) No 26284, PT No 4226, Mukim Bukit Katil, District of Melaka Tengah, Melaka measuring 14,681.96 sq ft (1,364 sq m) in the defendant's land development project at a purchase price of RM205,547.44, which was fully paid by the plaintiffs.

- G A temporary title to the said bungalow plot had been issued and registered in the names of the plaintiffs, and the same was charged to the Bank of Commerce (M) Bhd to finance the purchase of the said bungalow plot.

- H It was an express term of the said agreement and/or by necessary implication that the bungalow plot was bought for the purpose of building a bungalow house or other similar dwelling within the confines of the available land area comprised in the said bungalow plot.

- I In or about March 1999, and whilst in the process of preparations of building their bungalow house or other similar dwelling, the plaintiffs discovered that the said bungalow plot was substantially smaller than what was agreed to be the land area of the same.

Further, and in the process of diminishing the land area of the said bungalow plot, the defendant had erected/constructed a steep slope at the boundary thereof which was inherently dangerous and liable to collapse especially during inclement weather.

In the premises, the plaintiffs were performed to suspend their said preparations pending an explanation from the defendant as to the said discrepancy in the land area. Despite formal notice from the plaintiff's solicitors vide their letters dated 23 March 1999 and 5 April 1999, the defendant had failed, neglected and/or refused to provide any explanation as aforesaid and/or remedied the said discrepancy.

The plaintiffs were ready, willing and able at all material times to build their bungalow house or other similar dwelling on the said bungalow plot if the land area of the same was correct as agreed and prescribed under the said agreement and the said temporary title.

By reason of the aforesaid substantial breach of the said agreement by the defendant and the danger posed by the steep slope, the plaintiffs had been deprived of what was promised to them under the said agreement and/or had suffered substantial loss and damage arising therefrom.

The plaintiffs prayed for the following orders:

- (a) specific performance of the said agreement dated 29 April 1995 to the extent that the defendant restore the original land area of the said bungalow plot, or otherwise replace the said bungalow plot with another plot of similar or larger size;
- (b) further or alternatively, damages in addition to or in lieu of specific performance to be assessed;
- (c) alternatively, a refund of such proportion of the purchase price as the court shall deem fit and just;
- (d) interests; and
- (e) costs.

The trial started on 21 September 2000. The following witnesses testified for the plaintiffs:

- (1) Lee Ah Kau, a licensed surveyor ('SP1');
- (2) Ong Chong Wah, the first plaintiff ('SP2');
- (3) Khor Siew Suan, a registered valuer ('SP3'); and
- (4) Muralitaran s/o P Subramaniam, an engineer ('SP4').

The defendant called the following witnesses to testify:

- (1) Ooi Kah Huat, an engineer ('SD1');
- (2) Lee Weng Lip, a sub-contractor ('SD2'); and
- (3) Datuk Tan Koh Sui, a developer ('SD3').

As stated in the statement of agreed facts, the following material facts were agreed to by the plaintiffs and the defendant:

- (1) The plaintiffs are purchasers of a plot of land identified as Lot No 4226 (Now Lot No 6142) pursuant to a sale and purchase

- A agreement dated 29 April 1995 entered into between the plaintiffs as buyers and the defendant as seller.
- (2) The defendant is the developer of a scheme consisting of vacant bungalow plots, of which Lot No 4226 is one, in the Mukim of Bukit Katil, District of Melaka Tengah, Melaka.
- B (3) Lot No 4226's land area is represented to be 14,681.96 sq ft (1364 sq m) under the sale and purchase agreement, and the separate issue document of title HS(D) 26284 No PT 4226 Mukim Bukit Katil, Daerah Melaka Tengah.
- (4) The plaintiffs had paid the total purchase price of RM205,547.44 to the defendant for Lot No 4226 calculated at RM14 per sq ft based on a land area of 14,681.96 sq ft.
- C (5) It was an express term of the sale and purchase agreement and/or by necessary implication that Lot No 4226 was bought for the purpose of building a bungalow house or other similar dwelling within the confines of the available land area comprised in the said lot.

It cannot be disputed that out of the total 14,681.96 sq ft, what the plaintiffs eventually got when vacant possession of the lot was delivered to them was 9,073 sq ft (843 sq m) of flat land, and 5606 sq ft (521 sq m) of sloped land. This is clear from the evidence of SP1, the licensed surveyor employed by the plaintiffs to conduct demarcation and spot level survey of the land. SP1 prepared a survey plan (exh P4). Referring to exh P4, SP1 testified that the area marked A on lot 6142 (the said lot) was made up of flat land measuring 9073 sq ft (843 sq m). The area marked B on the said lot was sloped land measuring 5606 sq ft (521 sq m). According to SP1, the line marked with figure 59.66 was the top cutting of the slope and bottom cutting of the slope was at the same level as the road shown in exh P4. The difference between the top cutting and the bottom cutting was about 42 ft. The evidence of SP1 on this was not disputed by the defendant.

- G The first plaintiff testified that as a local boy, he wanted to come back and do his business in Malacca. As a software designer, he could work anywhere. According to the first plaintiff, as he was staying in Kuala Lumpur most of the time, he had asked his sister in Malacca to look for a piece of land as big as possible because he wanted to build a house with nice greenery and landscaping. According to him, because of the nature of his work, he had to stay in the house most of the time. What he wanted was a very nice and comfortable house. According to him, from time to time, he could take back his work and do gardening and landscaping around the house.
- H The first plaintiff also said that he would prefer the house to occupy about 3000 sq ft. The rest of the land would be landscaping. He was hopeful that there could be an area to build a pond. The first plaintiff produced plans for the house that he drew himself before he saw the site (exh P5 A-C).

- I According to the first plaintiff, he was not able to fulfill his expectation because he did not have enough land for the garden that he had planned and to do the landscaping. This was because the flat land (9073 sq ft) was the only land he could work on. According to him, the slope was very dangerous.

The first plaintiff also testified that he had seen the mock up of the land. He said what he saw from the mock up was a flat piece of land. But what he saw on the actual land was that certain part was flat and the other part was sloped land. After confirming that there was a slope on his land, the first plaintiff instructed his lawyer to check with the developer (the defendant). His lawyer sent a letter (exh P6) to the developer but he received no response from the developer.

The first plaintiff further said that only about 9,000 sq ft of the land was available to him. He admitted that he could do a lot on 9,000 sq ft, but he could not do what he had originally planned to do. According to him, in this case the defendant had to compensate him for the 5,000 sq ft of land which was taken away by the slope. The first plaintiff also said that the presence of the slope on his land made his land smaller and this was what he was unhappy about.

The relevant part of SD3's evidence is as follows:

SD3 was the managing director of the defendant's company. According to SD3, he had been a developer since 1977. SD3 said the first plaintiff became interested to buy the bungalow plot through his sister who was then working as a planner in Malacca Municipal Council. The land was sold to the plaintiffs cheaper through the recommendation of his sister. SD3 said he could sell the lot to the plaintiffs at a price more expensive than the price actually paid by him. SD3 did not agree that the plaintiffs' lot was only worth RM9 per sq ft because, according to him, it was a freehold land and that the number of such lots of land was limited. SD3 said if the plaintiffs had offered to sell back the land at RM10 per sq ft, he would be prepared to buy the land back at any time. SD3 also said that when he received the letter of demand from the plaintiffs' lawyers, he was disappointed because he had already given an RM3 discount to the plaintiffs. When asked whether he could still sell at RM14 per sq ft if he were required to build retaining walls, SD3 said that if he had to build retaining walls the price of the land would be RM25 to RM30 per sq ft, and that only at RM25 per sq ft would he be able to make some profits.

Under cross examination, SD3 said that in every bungalow lot there was a slope and that all bungalow lots were sloped land. SD3 said he would not know whether the fact that there was a slope on the plaintiffs' lot was made known to them, but according to SD3 the slope was there all the time.

SD3 agreed that in 1995, he knew he was selling 5,606 sq ft of slope at RM14 per sq ft to the plaintiffs.

SD3 also agreed that unless the plaintiffs somehow reclaimed the slope, he could never build on the area comprised in the slope. SD3 also agreed that in conclusion, the plaintiffs received about 9,000 sq ft to build their house.

Under re-examination, SD3 said that the plaintiffs got the same acreage of land sold to him under the sale and purchase agreement (14,681.96 sq ft). SD3 also said that because of the presence of the slope, he specifically put a condition in the sale and purchase agreement for the plaintiffs to build retaining walls. According to SD3, once retaining walls

- A were built, the plaintiffs would have a flat surface on the entire plot of their bungalow plot.

According to learned counsel for the plaintiffs, the case for the plaintiffs was simply this: they had paid RM205,547.44 for the price of a bungalow plot measuring 14,681.96 sq ft (ie RM14 per sq ft), which was bought for the specific purpose of building a bungalow or similar dwelling. This was pleaded in paras 3–5 of the statement of claim, which was admitted by the defendant in its statement of defence. The thrust of the plaintiffs' submission was that the plaintiffs did not get 14,681.96 sq ft which was promised by the defendant under the sale and purchase agreement dated 29 April 1995, to build his bungalow or other similar dwelling.

- C The plaintiffs contended that when the defendant delivered the land to them, what they eventually obtained was 9073 sq ft of flat land and 5606 sq ft of sloped land. It was their contention that the existence of the slope on land (ie resulting in 5606 sq ft of sloped land) constituted a breach of contract on the part of the defendant. Learned counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that if the land was sold without more (ie without any condition), then the plaintiffs would not succeed because the principle of caveat emptor would apply. But in this case, according to learned counsel for the plaintiffs, the land was bought for a specific purpose of building a bungalow. In other words, when they signed the sale and purchase agreement, the plaintiffs expected and were supposed to get 14,681.96 sq ft to build his house. Since they eventually obtained 5606 sq ft of sloped land out of the total area of the land, the plaintiffs did not get what they had bargained for. The plaintiffs urged the court to imply a term in the sale and purchase agreement that they were supposed to get 14,681.96 sq ft of buildable area (ie flat land) to build his house on. According to the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, the sale and purchase agreement did not expressly provide so but, the plaintiffs had paid the purchase price of RM205,547.44 on that basis and understanding.

- F In his submission, in response to the plaintiffs' allegation that the defendant did not inform him of the existence of the slope and that the sale and purchase agreement did not mention that slope could be created, learned counsel for the defendant contended that there was no fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the defendant. He submitted that the first plaintiff was a highly educated person and the agreement had been entered at arm's length. There was no obligation on the part of the defendant to protect the plaintiffs' interest. Learned counsel for the defendant added that if the plaintiffs had exercised ordinary diligence by visiting the site, they would have discovered that there would be slope on the land. The first plaintiff had entrusted his sister to look for the bungalow lot. If the plaintiffs had not exercised caution, they had to bear the risk.

- G In his reply to the plaintiffs' submission that the defendant had failed to deliver vacant possession of the bungalow lot with flat land (without the slope), learned counsel for the defendant submitted that the defendant had never promised (whether orally or in writing) to sell the bungalow lot with 14,681.96 sq ft of flat land. He referred to the title to the said land (at p 32 ikatan B, ikatan dokumen yang dipersetujui) and submitted that the title showed that that acreage of the land was 1364 sq m (14,681.96 sq ft). According to him, this was the exact acreage purchased by the plaintiffs under the sale and purchase agreement. So, learned counsel for the defendant submitted that the plaintiffs could not be heard to say that there had been a reduction in the acreage of bungalow lot given to them. The plaintiffs had in fact and in law obtained the total acreage which they purchased under the sale and purchase agreement.

Learned counsel for the defendant further submitted that the bungalow lot consisted of two portions: (i) the flat surface of 9,073 sq ft (843 sq m); and (ii) the sloped portion of 5,606 sq ft (521 sq m). He then drew the court's attention to the fact that the first plaintiff in his evidence said that he had intended to build a bungalow occupying an area of about 3,000 sq ft. Learned counsel for the defendant therefore submitted that there would still be 6,073 sq ft of flat land left for the plaintiffs to do landscaping, gardening and build a pond.

It was also submitted on behalf the defendant that the plaintiffs had not bargained for the bungalow lot to have 14,861.96 sq ft of flat land. The plaintiffs did not at any time indicate to the defendant that they would like to buy a bungalow lot with the entire area made up of flat land. It was submitted that there was nothing in the sale and purchase agreement which stated that the entire area of the lot would be flat land, and that there would be no slope. In fact, according to learned counsel for the defendant, from cl 6.1.3 of the sale and purchase agreement, it could be implied that the plaintiffs and the defendant had agreed that there would be a slope on the land. If not, there would be no necessity of having a provision in the sale and purchase agreement which required the plaintiffs to build retaining walls.

It was also the defendant's contention that it had never been the contractual intention on the part of the defendant to sell the bungalow lot with the land area consisting entirely of flat land. It was contended by the defendant that if the plaintiffs wanted the court to imply such a term in the sale and purchase agreement, the plaintiffs must establish that that was the intention of both parties. In this connection, learned counsel for the defendant submitted that the sale and purchase agreement was complete, effective and workable without the term which the plaintiffs wanted the court to imply.

In my view, the main issue before the court is whether it should imply in the sale and purchase agreement the term that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of land sold to the plaintiffs thereunder must be flat land.

As a starting point, in consideration of the main issue, I have reminded myself that the court cannot rewrite the sale and purchase agreement executed by the plaintiffs and the defendant. The court will only imply such a term or terms as may be necessary to render the agreement effective or complete in the manner in which the plaintiffs and the defendant are presumed to have intended. This was made clear in Lee Lim Huat V Yusuf Khan Bin Ghows Khan & Anor [1997] 2 MLJ 472, where at p 483, the Court of Appeal said:

- A That the approach we have adopted does not depart from settled jurisprudence is evidenced by the following passage appearing at p 81 of Law and Practice of Compromise (4th Ed) by David Foskett:
- B 'In addition to problems caused by imprecise drafting, parties may omit to include in their agreement a term which is necessary to render it effectual or complete. In these circumstances, the court will be prepared to imply such term or terms as may be necessary to render the agreement effective or complete in the manner in which the parties are presumed to have intended. The court cannot, however, rewrite the parties' agreement, a principle sometimes overlooked by those contending for the existence of an implied term. (Emphasis added.)'
- C Similarly, in Trollope & Colls Ltd v North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board [1973] 1 WLR 601, at p 609 Lord Pearson said:
- D Faced with the conflict of judicial opinion in this case, I prefer the views of Donaldson J and Cairns LJ as being more orthodox and in conformity with the basic principle that the court does not make a contract for the parties. The court will not even improve the contract which the parties have made for themselves, however desirable the improvement might be. The court's function is to interpret and apply the contract which the parties have made for themselves. If the express terms are perfectly clear and free from ambiguity, there is no choice to be made between different possible meanings: the clear terms must be applied even if the court thinks some other terms would have been more suitable. An unexpressed term can be implied if and only if the court finds that the parties must have intended that term to form part of their contract: it is not enough for the court to find that such a term would have been adopted by the parties as reasonable men if it had been suggested to them: it must have been a term that went without saying, a term necessary to give business efficacy to the contract, a term which, though tacit, formed part of the contract which the parties made for themselves.
- E
- F That a term will be implied if it is necessary to give efficacy to a contract was also stated by Bowen LJ in the well known case of The Moorcock (1889) 14 PD 64 at p 68:
- G Now, an implied warranty, or, as it is called, a covenant in law, as distinguished from an express contract or express warranty, really is in all cases founded upon the presumed intention of the parties, and upon reason. The implication which the law draws from what must obviously have been the intention of the parties, the law draws with the object of giving efficacy to the transaction and preventing such a failure of consideration as cannot have been within the contemplation of either side: and I believe if one were to take all the cases, and there are many, of implied warranties or covenants in law, it will be found that in all of them the law is raising an implication from the presumed intention of the parties with the object of giving to the transaction such efficacy as both parties must have intended that at all events it should have. (Emphasis added.)
- H
- I The term 'business efficacy' was explained by Scrutton LJ in Reigate v Union Manufacturing Co (Ramsbottom) [1918] 1 KB 592 at p 605:
- A term can only be implied if it is necessary in the business sense to give efficacy to the contract; that is, if it is such a term that it can be confidently be said that if at the time the contract was being negotiated someone had said to the parties, 'What will happen in such a case,' they would both have replied, 'Of course, so and so will happen; we did not take trouble to say that; it is too clear.

The court will be prepared to imply a term if it arises from the language of the agreement itself, and the circumstances under which the agreement was entered into (Chitty On Contracts (28th Ed) Vol I, para 13-004, p 644).

With those principles in mind, I turn to the facts and circumstances of this case. The starting point is the sale and purchase agreement. As I have said elsewhere in this judgment, the parties admitted that the area of the plot in question represented in the sale and purchase agreement was 14,681.96 sq ft and that it was a term of the agreement (either expressly provided or by necessary implication) that the land was bought for the purpose of building a bungalow or other similar house. There is no provision in the agreement which expressly provides that there shall be no slope on the land. But there is also no provision which clearly provides that there shall be slope on the land. There is also no express provision thereunder which provides that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of the land shall be flat land, or that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of the land shall be in a condition ready, fit and suitable for the construction of a bungalow, without the need to undertake any remedial works on any part of the land. Learned counsel for the defendant referred to in cl 6.1.3 of the sale and purchase agreement and submitted that by implication that clause showed that the parties had agreed that there would be a slope. Clause 6.1.3 provides:

All internal driveway, subsoil drains and sewage systems within the bungalow plot and retaining walls shall be constructed by the purchaser at his own cost and expenses.

In fact, there is another clause in the sale and purchase agreement which should also be considered in deciding whether the parties had indeed agreed that there would be a slope on the land. Paragraph 3.1 in the seventh Sch to the sale and purchase agreement provides that:

The vendor shall carry out earthworks on the bungalow plot as may be necessary in a terrain like manner, taking into account the nature and slope of the bungalow plot and its surroundings. The developer shall also carry out such leveling and earth filling as may be required by the project engineering.

In view of cl 6.1.3 and para 3.1 in the Seventh Schedule, I am prepared to conclude that the parties had agreed that the plaintiffs' land would be on a high ground. I am also prepared to accept the submission that since the land would be on high ground, there would be a slope on the land. On the invitation of the parties, I had visited the site on 9 January 2001. I found that the plaintiffs' land was on a hill. The general view of the land is as shown in the three photographs enclosed in the valuation report (exh P8) prepared by SP3. The first photograph shows the flat surface of the land in relation to the surrounding areas on top of the hill. The second photograph is the closer view of the flat area of the land and the upper portion of the slope (the first tier). The third photograph shows the view of the slope from the tar road

- A located at the same level as the terrace houses at the foot of the slope. Photographs A to I (exh P3 A–I) are more photographs showing the said lot, the slope and the terrace houses. As could be seen from photographs A, B, C, E, F, G (pp 6–8 ikatan C), the plaintiffs' land is located at a place which is higher than the terrace houses shown at the foot of the slope. Considering the location of the plaintiffs' land and existence of the slope, I conclude that
- B the purpose of the retaining walls which the plaintiffs were obliged to build was to retain and strengthen the slope so that it would not collapse or become eroded or washed down, thus affecting the terrace houses at the foot of the slope. However, I am not prepared to go further and conclude that because there would inevitably be a slope and retaining walls, the area of the
- C land available for construction to be delivered under the agreement could be less than 14,681.96 sq ft. The presence of the slope does not mean that the total area of the land can be substantially reduced. The presence of the slope and the reduction of total area of the land are two different things. The defendant contended that although 5,606 sq ft of the land was taken up by the slope, in terms, of total area, the plaintiffs still obtained 14,681.96 sq ft
- D of land. Indeed, the title still shows the total area to be 14,681.96 sq ft. But then, what is the point when the said 5,606 sq ft of sloped land cannot be used to build anything on? Even the defendant's managing director (SD3), under cross examination agreed that unless the plaintiff some how reclaimed the slope, he could never build on the area occupied by the slope. In other words, it is not too much to say that, unless the slope is reclaimed, the 5,606 sq ft of sloped land is practically useless. I hasten to add that unlike the sale and purchase agreements tendered as exhs D10B and D10C, the sale and purchase agreement executed by the plaintiffs and the defendant in this case does not contain special terms and conditions. Clause 25 in exhs D10B and D10C provides:
- F The sale is subject to the special terms and conditions set out in the annexure hereto. In the event that any of the terms and conditions in the annexure hereto shall be inconsistent with the terms and provisions of the other clauses in these present, the terms and provisions of the special terms and conditions shall prevail but only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith.
- G The special terms and conditions specified in the annexure to D10B and D10C are as follows:
- The purchaser hereby acknowledges that the said property is sold in its present state and condition.
- Clause 13 in D10B and D10C provides:
- H The description of the said property is believed and shall be deemed correct and no objection or requisition shall be made on account of any error of minor nature in description of the said property as well as to the quantity of the land.
- None of the above clauses is found in the sale and purchase agreement in this case. The presence of the sloped land could have been stated under the
- I third Sch to the sale and purchase agreement (the schedule on description of land). Nothing to that effect was provided or hinted thereunder. Instead, the third sch appears as follows:

As I have stated earlier, under cross examination, SD3 admitted that in 1995, he knew that the defendant was selling 5,606 sq ft of slope land at RM14 sq ft to the plaintiffs. SD3 also said that the land was sold to the plaintiffs below market price because of the slope. In order to lay the foundation for the defence that lot 4226 (Lot 6142) was sold to the plaintiffs at a price cheaper than the neighbouring lots, SD3 testified that lot 6141 (PT 4225) was sold at the price of RM17 per sq ft. SD3 also said that lot 6140 (PT 4224) and lot 6146 (PT 4230) were sold at RM18 per sq ft and RM21 per sq ft respectively. The sale and purchase agreements for these three lots of land were produced in evidence and marked as exhs D10A, D10B and D10C. At this stage, I must add that although exhs D10A, D10B and D10C indicate the purchase prices of the three lots of land concerned, I do not think D10A, D10B and D10C provide sufficient evidence to show, on the balance of probabilities, that the purchase price of RM14 per sq ft, paid by the plaintiffs for lot 4226 was a discounted price. This is because although lots 4224, 4225 and 4230 were plots in the same project, there are no sufficient particulars to show in terms of description and characteristics, that the three lots are similar to lot 4226, and are therefore comparable. Moreover, there is no evidence given to show that the nature of the transactions relating to the three lots are similar to and therefore comparable to lot 4226.

Next, the defendant, through the evidence of SD3, tried to introduce the evidence that the land was sold to the plaintiffs cheaper through the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister. This was objected to by learned counsel for the plaintiffs, who contended that the evidence was irrelevant, unless the defendant would be calling the first plaintiff's sister to say that the plaintiffs had asked for the cheaper rate. Learned counsel also relied on s 92 of the Evidence Act 1950 ('EA'). He submitted that as there was a written agreement in this case, it must be relied upon. He also contended that extraneous evidence to explain or contradict the written agreement should not be allowed. He also said that no notice had been given to the plaintiffs by the defendant to say that this would be raised as a defence. As such, the plaintiffs would not be able to respond in any way as the plaintiffs had closed their case. Learned counsel for the plaintiffs also submitted that the defendant was bound by its pleading. He also submitted that the line of questioning about the first plaintiff's sister should also be excluded on the ground of hearsay.

- A Learned counsel for the defendant submitted that the defendant wanted to introduce the background to show how the plaintiffs became interested in purchasing the land. He argued that only material facts need to be pleaded: the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister was not material at all, but was merely an item of evidence to show the decision making process on the part of the plaintiffs in buying the said lot. Learned
- B counsel for the defendant also contended that the question of relevancy did not come into the picture at that stage. He said, the question of relevancy would come into the picture when the court sifts through the evidence later.

- C With respect, I do not agree. Under s 136 of the EA, read with s 5 of the same Act, the trial judge is empowered to permit only such evidence to be given which, in his opinion, was relevant and admissible. The judge does not have to hear the evidence objected to and then later, after it is completed and after much time is wasted, decide whether the evidence is relevant and admissible. Questions of admissibility of evidence are questions of law and determinable by the judge. If it is his duty to admit all relevant evidence, it is no less his duty to exclude all irrelevant evidence (Malaysian Vermicelli
- D Manufacturers (Melaka) Sdn Bhd v Pendakwa Raya [2001] MLJU 359). In the first place, without the first plaintiff's sister coming to the court to testify, the evidence on what she was alleged to have said or recommended is hearsay. Secondly, it is trite law that parties are bound by their pleadings. In this connection, I do not find anything in the statement of defence to
- E show that the defendant had pleaded that the land was sold to the plaintiffs at a cheaper price because of the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister. Further, I find that the allegation that the land was sold cheaper to the plaintiffs because of the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister was never put to the first plaintiff (SP2) when he was giving evidence. If it was a genuine defence and so crucial to the defendant's case it should have
- F raised or at least put to SP2. Failure to do so in the absence of a valid explanation (and none was offered in this case) would constitute another reason to stop the defendant from raising it in evidence as a defence. (Chua Beow Huat v PP [1970] 2 MLJ 29, Browne v Dunn (1893) 6 R 67 and Aik Ming (M) Sdn Bhd & Ors v Chang Ching Chuen & Ors and another appeal [1995] 2 MLJ 770). In my view, the reasons as aforesaid or indeed any of
- G them serve as sufficient grounds for the court to disallow the evidence that the land was sold cheaper to the plaintiffs because of the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister. Accordingly, I disallowed that evidence or the line of questioning concerning the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister.

- H With the court's ruling as aforesaid, the emphasis on the recommendation of the first plaintiff's sister had to be abandoned by the defendant. Next, the evidence of SD3 assumes a slightly different colour. SD3 said that he would be able to sell the lot to the plaintiff at a price higher than the price actually sold to him. SD3 did not agree that the plaintiffs' lot was only worth RM9 per sq ft, because, according to him, it was a freehold land and the numbers of such lots were limited. SD3 said if the plaintiffs had offered to sell back the land at RM10 per sq ft, he would be prepared to buy back the land at anytime. SD3 also said when he received the letter of demand from the plaintiffs' lawyer he was disappointed because he had already given an RM3 discount. He said he could not sell the land at RM14 per sq ft if he had to build the retaining wall. According to him, if he had to build the retaining wall, the price of the land would be RM25–RM30 per sq ft. Only at RM25 per sq ft would he be able to make some profit. This line of defence was reinforced by SD3 in his evidence under cross examination. The relevant part of the cross examination runs as follows:

Q: Since you knew there was a slope when you intended to sell Lot 6142 in 1995, why did not you sell only the flat part of the land without the slope?

A: I sold the land below market price because of the slope.

Q: Is it correct to say that in 1995, you knew you were selling 5,606 sq ft of slope at RM14 per sq ft to the plaintiffs?

A: Yes.

Q: You would agree with me that unless the plaintiff somehow reclaimed the slope, he could never build on the area comprised in the slope?

A: Yes.

Q: You would agree in the conclusion that the plaintiff received 8,000 sq ft to build his house?

A: Yes.

From the evidence of SD3, it is clear that in answer to the plaintiff's claim, the defendant contended that the price of RM14 per sq ft was a discounted price and that the land was sold at that price (which according to SD3 was below market price), because of the slope which had reduced the flat land area to 9,073 sq ft. This defence appears to be crucial to the defendant's case. In fact, it was pursued to the end in the submission of learned counsel for the defendant. But the essential question is this: was that defence pleaded in the statement of defence? I have considered the statement of defence, but I find nothing therein to show or from which inference could be made that such a defence was pleaded. Further, this defence, which was so crucial to the defendant, was also never raised or put to the first plaintiff when he gave evidence. Again, I am compelled to say that such a failure, in the absence of a valid explanation, would be another reason to bar the defendant from raising it in its defence (Chua Beow Huat, Browne v Dunn and Aik Ming (M) Sdn Bhd v Chang Ching Chuen). In the circumstances, the probability that such a defence was an afterthought cannot be ruled out. Even if the evidence of SD3 on the issue of 'the price was discounted because of the existence of the slope' could be considered, the question is whether the plaintiffs were aware of this. Was it also the understanding of the plaintiffs when they entered into the agreement, that they were given a discounted price of RM14 per sq ft because there would be a slope on the land and that they would get only 9,073 sq ft of flat land? The first plaintiff, in his evidence under cross examination, said that the defendant did not tell him that there would be slope on the land. Earlier, in examination in chief, the first plaintiff said that he had seen the mock up of the land. What he saw from the mock up was a flat piece of land. Under cross examination, when asked whether his sales personnel had been instructed to inform potential buyers that there were slopes on the bungalow lots, SD3 said he could not

- A recall, but said that model in the defendant's office showed that there were slopes on the bungalow lots. In other words, SD3 could not say whether buyers were informed of the existence of the slopes. In his evidence under examination in chief, specifically with reference to the plaintiffs' lot, SD3 said that he would not know whether the fact that there was a slope on the plaintiffs' land was made known to them, but he said that the slope was there all the time. If the model in the defendant's office had been produced, then perhaps it would throw more light on the issue as to whether there was a slope on the plaintiffs' lot. Unfortunately, the defendant did not produce the mock up in court and no explanation was given. I conclude that the defendant had failed to show on the balance of probabilities, that the mock up showed slopes on the bungalow lots. I hold further that the first plaintiff's evidence that from the mock up, what he saw was a flat piece of land, remains unrebutted.

- D I have already said that the existence of the slope and the reduction in the total area of the land are two different things. In order to be representative of the contracting parties' intention that the 14,681.96 sq ft could include 5,606 sq ft of the sloped land in this case, there must be express provision to that effect. In my view, mere mention of a 'retaining wall' and 'slope' in the sale and purchase agreement is not sufficient to capture and convey that intention. I am of the view that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of land purchased by the plaintiffs under the sale and purchase agreement must be available and ready for construction. By 'available and ready for construction', I mean the entire 14,681.96 sq ft must be in a condition fit, suitable and ready for construction of a bungalow or other similar dwelling without the necessity of doing any remedial works to improve the condition of the land. In order to be in such a condition, the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of the land in this case must be flat land as shown in the first photograph in exh P8 and the photographs in exh P3 H-I. If a substantial portion of the land (in this case, some 38%) is sloped land as shown in the third photograph in exh P8 and the photographs in exh P3 A-G, then in my view, it could not be said that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft is in the condition that it was available and ready for construction. This is because, as I have said, even SD3 admitted that unless the plaintiff reclaimed the slope, he could never build on the area occupied by the slope. In my view, it would be pointless to buy a bungalow lot with the total area of 14,681.96 sq ft, out of which 38% would be taken up by the steep slope, resulting in 5,606 sq ft of the land being practically useless to build or do anything on, unless extensive and expensive remedial works are undertaken to reclaim same. In my judgment, although in the title to the land, the total area is still recorded as 14,681.96 sq ft, in effect the available land area has been reduced by 38%. The fact that the land was on a hill, that there would be a slope and that retaining walls would have to be built does not mean that the defendant could reduce the land area available for construction. In this case, the area available for construction in the sense I explained earlier, was reduced by 38% of the total area. It must be borne in mind that the plaintiffs were not buying a plot of land for the purpose of turning it into a quarry or some other purposes in respect of which the flatness of the land would not be essential. They were buying a plot of land to build a bungalow. They were therefore entitled, under the sale and purchase agreement, to obtain 14,681.96 sq ft of land suitable not only to build their bungalow, but also to do landscaping and other things necessary to enable them to enjoy and use the land as registered owners. The fact that the first plaintiff had admitted in evidence that the bungalow would occupy only 3,000 sq ft and that he would still have 6,000 sq ft for his landscaping and garden does not mean that the defendant was entitled to deliver to the plaintiffs, a plot, of which 38% of the total area was sloped land. I think the size of the house the plaintiffs wanted to build does not matter. The fact is they bought a plot of land measuring 14,681.96 sq ft to build a bungalow. He did not intend to buy a plot in respect of which 5,606 sq ft would be sloped land, which would entail substantial expenses which might amount to more than the price of the land itself, to make the entire area of the land available and ready for construction. In my view, considering the circumstances of this case, the contract entered between the parties in this case is the type in respect of which the buyer expects the whole area to be flat land. And the seller knew this. However, there was no provision in the sale and purchase agreement expressly providing for such a term. The question is whether the court should imply such a term in the sale and purchase agreement?

In order to answer this question, it is useful to refer to Shirlaw v Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd [1939] 2 KB 206. In that case, by an agreement dated 21 December 1933, the first defendant (the company) appointed the plaintiff, who was then a director, to be managing director for a term of ten years. Article 91 of the first defendant's articles of association provided that a managing director should 'subject to the provisions of any contract between him and the company, be subject to the same provisions as to removal as the other directors of the company, and if he ceases to hold the office of director, he shall ipso facto and immediately cease to be a managing director'. Article 105 gave the company power to remove a director before the expiration of his period of office. In 1935, the second defendant (the Federated Companies), which was a company formed to take over the shares of a number of companies, including the first defendant, acquired all the shares of the first defendant. By a special resolution passed on 17 April 1936, the existing articles of association of the first defendant were abrogated and new articles adopted. Article 8 empowered the second defendant by an instrument subscribed by two directors and the secretary to remove any director of the company. Article 9 provided that a director need not hold a share qualification. The new articles incorporated a large part of Table A, including art 68, which made a managing director's appointment subject to determination ipso facto if he ceased to be a director. On 27 March 1937, an instrument subscribed as above was delivered to the first defendant removing the plaintiff from the office of director, and the first defendant thereupon treated him as ceasing to be managing director. The plaintiff sued the first defendant for wrongful repudiation of the agreement and the second defendant for wrongly procuring, causing or inducing the first defendant's breach of the agreement. Humphrey J awarded damages against both the

- A defendants. On appeal to the Court of Appeal, it was held: (1) that it was an implied term of the agreement dated 21 December 1933, that the first defendant should not remove the plaintiff from his position of director during the term of years for which he was appointed managing director; (2) that it was an implied term that the first defendant would not alter its articles of association so as to create a right in the first defendant or any one
- B else to remove the plaintiff from his position of director during the same term of years. The decision of the Court of Appeal was affirmed by the House of Lords [1940] AC 701.

- C In the Court of Appeal, Mac Kinnon LJ explained a test which may serve as a useful guide in resolving the issue as to whether a term should be implied in an agreement or not. At p 227, the learned judge said:

- D For my part, I think that there is a test that may be at least as useful as such generalities. If I may quote from an essay which I wrote some years ago, I then said: 'Prima facie that which in any contract is left to be implied and need not be expressed is something so obvious that it goes without saying; so that, if, while the parties were making their bargain, an officious bystander were to suggest some express provision for it in their agreement, they would testily suppress him with a common 'Oh, of course!'.

The learned judge then went on to apply the test in the case before him (pp 227–228):

- E Applying that in this case, I ask myself what would have happened if, when this contract had been drafted and was awaiting signature, a third party reading the draft had said:

- F 'Would it not be well to put in provision that the company shall not exercise or create any right to remove Mr Shirlaw from his directorship, and he have no right to resign his 'directorship?' I am satisfied that they would both have assented to this as implied already, and agreed to its expression for greater certainty. Mr Shirlaw would certainly have said: 'Of course that is implied. If I am to be bound by this agreement, including the barring of my activities under 'cll 11 and 12 when I cease to be managing director, obviously the company must not have, or create, the power to remove me at any moment from the Board and so disqualify me from that post'; and the company, which must be presumed to have been then desirous of binding him to serve them as managing director for ten years, would, I think, with equal alacrity have said: 'Of course that is implied. If you were tempted by some 'offer elsewhere, it would be monstrous for you to be able to resign your directorship and, by so disqualifying yourself from being managing director, put an end to this agreement.'

- H Applying the above test in this case, I ask myself what would happen if the sale and purchase agreement was awaiting signature, a bystander reading the draft agreement had said: 'This plot of land is on a hill. Would it not be well to put a term that the entire area of 14,681.96 sq ft of land to be delivered under this agreement shall be flat land so that it will be in condition fit, suitable and ready for construction to commence?'. I am
- I satisfied that in all probability, the plaintiffs and the defendant would have agreed with this as implied and agreed to its expression to avoid misunderstanding later. The plaintiffs would certainly have said: 'Of course that is implied. The purpose of buying the bungalow plot is to build a bungalow or similar dwelling. Since we are buying a bungalow on a high ground and would have to incur additional expenditure to build the retaining walls, apart from having to pay RM205,547.44 for the price of the land, we are entitled to receive the plot with its entire area made up of flat land so that it is in the condition fit, suitable and ready for us to start the construction of the bungalow and do other things necessary to enable us to enjoy and use the land as every land owner should'; and the company, which must be presumed to have been desirous to make the sale successful, would I think, have said: 'Of course that is implied. Although your land would be on a hill and that you would have to build retaining walls, we will not be discharging our contractual obligation if we give you anything less than 14,681.96 sq ft of flat land for you to start building your house, garden, do landscaping and other things necessary, to enable you as registered owners, to have the expected full enjoyment and use of the land, without having to incur additional expenditure to improve the condition of the land, other than to build the retaining walls. We realize that if this is not implied, you would not have agreed to go on with the purchase. After all, this agreement is not subject to the special terms and conditions that the plot is sold in its present state and condition'.

In my judgment, considering the sale and purchase agreement in this case, the purpose for which the land was bought and other circumstances of the case, the term that the entire 14,681.96 sq ft of land under the agreement must be flat land, is necessary to make the agreement effective and complete. I am satisfied on the balance of probabilities that it is a term which must have been too clear or obvious to the plaintiffs and the defendant. In the result, I hold that it was an implied term of the sale and purchase agreement that the entire area of the bungalow plot to be delivered to the plaintiffs must, at the time of delivery, be flat land so that it is in the condition fit, suitable and ready for construction on it to commence. By delivering to the plaintiffs, the plot of land with 5,606 sq ft of sloped land, the defendant had committed a breach of the sale and purchase agreement.

Damages

As could be seen from the discussion of liability in this case, when the land was delivered to the plaintiffs, out of the total area of 14,681.96 sq ft, 5,606 sq ft were occupied by the slope. I have held that this constituted a breach of the agreement on the part on the defendant.

According to the registered valuer (SP3) who gave evidence of the valuation of the land for the plaintiff, she visited the site on 13 October 2000. She noticed that the property had been levelled. Part of the land sloped steeply towards the metalled backlane of some newly constructed double storey terraced houses. According to SP3, her valuation was based on the comparison method which entailed analysis of recent evidence of values of comparable properties in the neighbourhood and making the necessary adjustments for differences. In this case, SP3 had made

A adjustment for location, land size and the shape of the land which were in fact the favourable factors of the land. According to SP3, the only unfavourable factor of the land was its terrain; ie sloping downwards towards the back lane of some terrace houses. This, according to SP3 made a difference. SP3 fixed the value of the whole land including the slope to be RM140,000 (RM9.50 per sq ft).

B In his evidence, SD3 did not agree that the price of the lot sold to the plaintiffs was RM9.50 per sq ft. He said in late 1999 he had sold a lot at RM21 per sq ft. The defendant did not produce any valuation report or evidence to challenge the valuation made by SP3. No particulars were given even on the lot which was sold by SD3 in 1999 for RM21 per sq ft. In the circumstances, I accept the evidence of valuation given by SP3.

C I conclude that the presence of the slope had reduced the value of the land to RM140,000 (RM9.50 per sq ft). The plaintiffs had paid to the defendant RM205,547.44 (RM14 per sq ft) for the whole land. The loss in value of the land per one sq ft is RM4.50. The loss in value of the whole land is therefore RM66,068.82 (based on the formula $14,681.96 \times \text{RM}4.50$). In my judgment, that is the amount of damages which the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants.

Conclusion

E Judgment is entered for the plaintiffs. The defendant is ordered to pay to the plaintiffs:

- (1) damages amounting to RM66,068.82 (based on the formula $14,681.96 \times \text{RM}4.50$);
- (2) interest at 8%pa from 29 April 1995 until the date of full settlement; and
- F (3) costs.

Plaintiff's claim allowed.
